ABSTRACT

The mini project podcast website is a web-based platform designed to provide users with a seamless experience for browsing, streaming, and accessing podcast episodes. Built using HTML, CSS, and bootstrap, this project demonstrates the application of modern web development techniques to create a responsive, user-friendly, and visually appealing platform for podcast enthusiasts.

In this project, the HTML file structures the website with key sections such as featured podcasts, categories, episode lists, and a media player for streaming content. CSS and Bootstrap are utilized to enhance the design, providing a clean modern layout with responsive elements that adapt seamlessly across devices. Bootstrap components like cards, navbar, carousel sliders, and buttons are integrated to create an interactive and visually engaging user experience.

Features such as embedded audio players, playlists, and subscription forms are implemented to improve functionality and user engagement.

Overall, the podcast website serves as a practical solution for hosting and organizing podcast content while reinforcing key web development concepts like responsive design, component styling, and layout structuring with Bootstrap. This project offers an excellent learning opportunity for beginners to explore how modern frameworks can streamline web application development.
